Periodical literature is the cutting edge of women's scholarship, feminist theory, and much of women's culture. Feminist Periodicals: A Current Listing of Contents is published by the Office of the University of Wisconsin System Women's Studies Librarian on a quarterly basis with the intent of increasing public awareness of feminist periodicals. It is our hope that Feminist Periodicals will serve several purposes: to keep the reader abreast of current topics in feminist literature; to increase readers' familiarity with a wide spectrum of feminist periodicals; and to provide the requisite bibliographic information should a reader wish to subscribe to a journal or to obtain a particular article at her library or through interlibrary loan. (Users will need to be aware of the limitations of the new copyright law with regard to photocopying of copyrighted materials.)

Table of contents pages from current issues of major feminist journals are reproduced in each issue of Feminist Periodicals, preceded by a comprehensive annotated listing of all journals we have selected. As publication schedules vary enormously, not every periodical will have table of contents pages reproduced in each issue of FP. The annotated listing provides the following information on each journal:

1. Year of first publication.
2. Frequency of publication.
3. Subscription prices (print only; for online prices, consult publisher).
4. Subscription address.
6. Editorial address (if different from subscription address).
8. OCLC, Inc. Control Number.
9. Selected publications in which the journal is indexed.
10. Selected fulltext products in which publication appears or vendor intermediaries who make the full text available.
11. Subject focus/statement of purpose of the journal.

Please note that in the actual text, only the numbers 1 to 11 are used to identify the different categories of information.

Our goal in FP is to represent English-language periodicals from around the world that focus on women's studies or women's issues. Generally, we do not include mainstream newsstand magazines. We are also unable to include periodicals that lack a complete table of contents. We encourage feminist serials to build a full table of contents into their regular format to facilitate possible inclusion in FP and indexing elsewhere.

Interested readers will find more complete information on feminist periodicals in DWM: A Directory of Women's Media, published by the National Council for Research on Women (530 Broadway at Spring Street, New York, NY 10012); and in Women's Periodicals and Newspapers: A Union List of the Holdings of Madison Area Libraries, edited by James P. Danky and compiled by Maureen E. Hady, Barry Christopher, and Neill E. Strache (Boston: G. K. Hall, 1982).
Suggestions for improvements of Feminist Periodicals are gratefully received. We would particularly appreciate assistance from readers in the UW System with our efforts to keep the holding information complete and up to date. Please let us know about new subscriptions, subscriptions we have overlooked, cancellations, or other pertinent information. Feminist Periodicals is also available on microfilm at the library of the State Historical Society of Wisconsin.

University of Wisconsin System users: To locate these periodicals within the UW System, do a UW System/Universal Borrowing search from your campus catalog (labeled variously “Other Libraries,” “More Libraries,” “Other Catalogs,” “Other UW Catalogs,” etc.) If information on actual holdings (volumes and issues) is not in the records retrieved, contact the Reference Department for each library of interest:

11. "Berkeley Journal of Gender, Law & Justice, a continuation of the Berkeley Women's Law Journal, is guided by an editorial policy which distinguishes us from other law reviews and feminist journals. Our mandate is to publish research, analysis, narrative, theory, and commentary that address the lives and struggles of underrepresented women. We believe that excellence in feminist legal scholarship requires critical examination of the intersection of gender with one or more other axes of subordination, including, but not limited to, race, class, sexual orientation, and disability. Therefore discussions that treat women as a monolithic group do not fall within our mandate. Because conditions of inequality are continually changing, our mandate is continually evolving."

Both national and international in focus, JGL is intended to serve as a forum for topics inadequately addressed in most law journals and reviews, including issues concerning women, children, family, sexuality, reproductive rights, and violence. The articles in JGL approach legal issues from a variety of disciplines. We aim to promote an expansive view of feminism embracing women and men of all colors, classes, sexual orientations, and cultures."

The editors are committed to providing a forum for feminist analysis, debate, and exchange. The feminist movement has demonstrated that the study of women is more than a compensatory project. Instead, feminism has the potential fundamentally to reshape the way we view the world. We wish not just to interpret women's experiences but to change women's condition. For us, feminist thought represents a transformation of consciousness, social forms, and modes of action."

11. "Femspec, a peer-reviewed journal, is interested in developing a community of like-minded people engaged in speculating, theorizing, creating and questioning gender across the boundaries, including issues of sexual diversity. We emphasize interdisciplinary approaches, and encourage work on teaching as well as literary and cultural criticism and creative material. We hope an approach to pedagogy will bring in work from a wider area of disciplines. We are interested in a variety of feminisms and aim to be inclusive of ethnic and cultural diversity in an internationalist perspective. We are also committed to publishing feminist experimental prose and poetic works, and to experimenting across media. Our impetus came from the collectively-perceived lack of attention to non-linear writing, sf, fantasy, magical realism and supernatural works in feminist journals and audiences the need of consistently evolving developed levels of feminism in sf criticism; and the inadequacy of feminist realism publishing outlets in the U.S."

   reproductive health needs and support women's right to decide whether, when and how to have children... [Its] woman-centered perspective...allows us to identify and understand women's reproductive health needs, and therefore evaluate and improve on existing policy and practice to women's benefit.... To this end, the journal explores what is meant by women's needs and how these can best be met. It addresses fundamental values, concerns and dilemmas, acknowledging the multi-faced nature of problems and solutions. Finally, it reflects on commonalities and differences in goals and points of view among those involved in the field – in order to foster increased communication and cooperation, new thinking and action, and new forms of consensus."

6. Editor, 3 E. 10th St., Ste. 1B1, New York, NY 10013 [email: mdimen@psychoanalysis.net].
11. "Studies in Gender and Sexuality is a response to the excitement attendant to recent research and writing by scholars and clinicians. It provides a forum for examining gender and sexuality that is both multidisciplinary and interdisciplinary. As clinicians and scholars who have written and practiced at the intersection of feminist theory and clinical psychoanalysis, the Editors are especially interested in those areas of controversy that invite the divergent perspectives and insights of different disciplines. Early issues of SGS focus on transgender identities and intersexuality; contemporary readings of the category of perversion; puberty and adolescence revised and revisited; and the intersections among class, race, and gender in theory, culture, and the clinical situation. The primary goal of SGS is to promote dialogue on these and other timely topics among clinicians, researchers, and theorists. Consonant with this goal, the journal also publishes related work from the humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences, where questions involving gender and sexuality are currently in lively debate."

Women as Breadwinners: The Gendered Nature of Side-Bets and Their Influence on Correctional Officers’ Commitment to the Organization
Marie L. Griffin

Increasingly, researchers have examined workplace factors that influence correctional officers’ commitment to the organization, yet few have assessed the way in which factors outside the immediate work environment influence attachment or whether the effects differ for male and female officers. Making use of Becker’s concept of side bets, this study examined the gendered nature of outside influences on correctional officers’ commitment to remain with the prison organization until retirement. The findings suggest that some measures of side-bet function differently for male and female officers, with those side bets representing family affiliation and financial responsibility significantly influencing female, but not male officers’ level of continuance commitment.

Exploring the Social World of Aging Female Prisoners
Jennifer J. Krabill and Ronald H. Aday

Older women in prison represent a much-neglected population, and only recently have researchers begun to address the adjustments patterns of this emerging population. Using a sample of 29 female inmates over age 50 housed in a southeastern prison, this qualitative research identified how older female offenders adapt to prison life. Based on inmate narratives, the study focuses on how prison acquaintances are selected, the evolution of a social support network characterized by perceived support, shared activities, shared conversations, and work and recreational interactions. Findings indicate that although most have family members with whom they remain in contact and have emotionally close relationships, prison friendships help to sustain older women in coping when family members may not be readily available. Barriers that prevent inmates from providing mutual support are discussed and policy issues for responding to the social needs of women aging in prison are addressed.

A Descriptive Comparison of Criminality, Substance Use, and Mental Health Among Two Samples of Female Offenders
Michele Staton Tindall, Carrie Oser, Jameison Duvall, Cori Leukfeld, and J. Matthew Webster

With the growing number of women involved in the criminal justice system, there is a need to examine female offenders in order to understand potential differences which might have important implications for treatment assessment and planning. The purpose of this study is to describe criminal histories, substance use, and mental health of two samples of female offenders in the community. Drug court (n = 123) and probationers (n = 150). Findings suggest differences between the groups on measures of lifetime and recent substance use. A higher percentage of female probationers reported lifetime use of five substances, but female drug court participants reported more recent substance use. In addition, a higher percentage of female probationers reported lifetime depression, anxiety, cognitive impairment, and difficulties controlling violent behavior, as well as recent mental health problems when compared with drug court participants. Logistic regression models indicated that membership in these two groups could be predicted by drug use and mental health. These findings suggest that a "one size fits all" approach for working with community substance using female offenders may not be appropriate.

The Successful Completion of Probation and Parole Among Female Offenders
Stephanie Carinmichael, Angela R. Gover, Barbara Koons-Witt, and BobbiDawn Inabinet

Recent research focusing on women in the criminal justice system has highlighted dramatic increases in incarceration rates and women involved in community corrections. Despite studies that suggest that female offenders have unique and differing needs than their male counterparts, little literature suggests females typically receive programming and services that were initially designed for male offenders. In an effort to establish what needs are prevalent among a group of female probationers and parolees, data from a statewide sample of 503 women completing their community correction sentences in a Southwestern state between January 1997 and April 1997 are examined. Specifically, this study examines the factors that significantly contribute to the successful completion of probation and parole. Logistic regression analysis reveals that age, race, and alcohol and drug usage problems were the strongest predictors of success among female offenders. Limitations of these data and policy implication from this research are discussed.

Revisiting Albert Bandura’s Social Learning Theory to Better Understand and Assist Victims of Intimate Personal Violence
James F. Anderson and Kimberly Kras

Domestic violence or intimate personal violence, a matter once considered private, has gained increased attention as a public health crisis. In their efforts to better understand and prevent this behavior, social science researchers and epidemiologists have discovered the link between early exposure to violence and sexual abuse. This paper uses Albert Bandura’s social learning theory to explain interpersonal and intergenerational violence. In the final analysis, it argues that effective treatment and prevention should include both criminal justice and public health strategies.

Women Sexually Victimized in Psychotherapy Speak Out:
The Dynamics and Outcome of Therapist-Client Sex
Irit Nachmani
Eli Sofer

The present study was a result of an extraordinary opportunity to interview 23 women patients who had sexual relations with their therapists. The paper presents the phenomenological viewpoint of therapists-client sex (TCS) from the victims' perspectives. Patients were asked to describe their emotional experiences during the transgressed therapy period. They depicted a sense of ambience towards TCS that included feelings of dependency, helpfulness, and powerlessness, along with feelings of being chosen and achieving control over the therapist. The former victims' accounts revealed both short- and long-term emotional bases.

When Recounting the Traumatic Memories Is Not Enough:
Treating Persistent Self-Devaluation Associated with Rape and Victim-Blaming Rape Myths
Avigail Moor

Rape is not only a vicious physical assault; it is similarly a horrific attack on the self. The violation of rape survivors' innermost boundaries, commonly impairs their very core of being. Moreover, victim-blaming rape myths frequently magnify and deepen the original wounds. This can be extreme and incite guilt and shame that are often quite unres strong treatments. This paper seeks to address a gap in the literature concerning the treatment of the combined impact of rape and related internalized myths on survivors' sense of self. Explicitly, this paper outlines therapy and guidelines for therapy are utilized in accordance. To be most effective, treatment must provide a therapeutic environment free of all prejudicial attitudes toward rape survivors. Wherein rape-specific injuries in the self are directly and empathically addressed.

KEYWORDS. Rape, rape myths, psychological sequelae of rape, rape treatment

Group Work with a New Population:
Women in Domestic Relationships Responding to Violence with Violence
Leslie E. Tower

An important consequence of pro-active policies for domestic violence is the arrest of women. With the retention of violent and terror-stricken in the mainstream, a thorough understanding of the motivations, contexts, and consequences of women's use of violence is needed. Widely used, care treatment models are reviewed, and a model is proposed. This model incorporates aspects of group process, group leadership, group development, mutual aid, self-determination, and member roles and group concern. Safety issues, dynamics of abuse, anger management, children's issues, coping strategies, empowerment, and community resources, exploring prior victimization, relationship issues, and self-nurturing.

KEYWORDS. Domestic violence, women's violence, battered women, domestically violent, groups, family violence

Mental Health Services Seeking in Sexual Assault Victims
Sarah E. Ullman

Sexual assault victims experience significant mental health sequelae from being victimized. Despite these psychological symptoms, survivors seek traditional mental health services at low rates. Little research has addressed the potential barriers that may lead to lower rates of mental health service seeking or whether these services help survivors to recover from the psychological impact of sexual assault. This paper reviews literature on sexual assault victimization and mental health service seeking to examine what is currently known. Certain demographic background, assaults, characteristics, and post-assault factors appear to be related to likelihood of mental health service seeking, yet most studies of correlates of victims' help-seeking have been limited to nonprobability samples. Suggestions for theory, research, and clinic practice are made including longitudinal investigations studying a range of potential mental health support sources and development of innovative mental health services targeting underserved subpopulations.

KEYWORDS. Sexual assault, mental health services, barriers, women

Speculation as to Why Women "Get" PTSD More Often Than Men
Catherine A. Simmons

There is a great deal of speculation about why women are at greater risk than men for being diagnosed with PTSD. Among the plausible arguments are (1) differences in the types of trauma experienced, (2) inflated rates due to methodological gender bias, (3) socially defined social roles and confronting structures, (4) biological differences, and (5) differences in cognitive perceptions of traumatic events. The following conceptual study outlines and discusses these arguments using relevant research findings and logical reasoning, while paying particular attention to how the arguments interplay in feminist therapy.

Two Moms and a Baby: Counseling Lesbian Couples Choosing Motherhood
Terry McKenney Ervin

Lesbian mothers are often excluded from the experiences, wisdom, and folklore shared by heterosexual mothers. Their support system may not include other lesbian mothers, and fear and hatred may prevent bisexual mothers from sharing their experiences with lesbians. Moreover, the usual model for motherhood is often denied to lesbians who have been rejected by their family of origin, or whose family of origin disregards lesbian motherhood. These circumstances leave lesbian couples choosing motherhood few options for information and support-promoting new turns to new professionals. This paper provides resources to support those of women who may have as they begin to explore bringing a child into their lives. It also provides a list of questions that may want to explore as they begin a counseling relationship with a lesbian couple choosing motherhood.

Running from the Demon: Culturally Specific Group Therapy for Depressed Hmong Women in a Family Medicine Residency Clinic
Christine C. Donner
Beatrice "Bean" E. Robinson
Meg L. Striepe
Pang Foun Yang Rhodes

This exploratory study utilized qualitative data from three sets of baseline and post-treatment for its group to explore the experiences, perceptions, and experiences of 14 Hmong women participants in therapy groups conducted in a primary care setting. This new therapy group intervention, based on relational-cultural theory and using narrative therapy, was designed to be culturally specific while striving for integration, and multidisciplinary to reflect the interconnection among an array of factors affecting mental health. Participants were generally positive in their assessments of the therapy group experience and made few negative comments about the group. The data suggest that this intervention is effective in helping Hmong women to gain social and emotional support, be able to identify coping mechanisms, and integrate Western and Hmong practices.
