

THINGS ARE TOUGH

ALL OVER

This year resident tuition at the Law School reaches $900 for the first time. (Many of us, including the Gargoyle remember the anguish generated when tuition went from $32.50 to $37.50—per semester.) Non-residents pay $2856 for the year. The amount of tuition is set after the state budget is adopted. Students, through tuition, pay a substantial percentage of the cost of instruction, making up the difference between actual costs and state appropriations.

We are not alone. The Harvard Alumni Bulletin reveals that Harvard students will pay $2950, plus a health fee of $150. At Chicago it is $3600, at Columbia, $3740, Pennsylvania will charge $3760, Stanford $3810 and Yale, $3750. All have had major increases in 1975-76.

* * *

HURST SPEAKS TO ABA CONFERENCE

On June 14, Professor Willard Hurst was one of the speakers at a conference on Federal and State roles in establishing standards of conduct for corporate management. The Conference was brought together by the ABA Committee on Federal Regulation and Securities, Section on Corporations, Banking and Business Law.

Ever since he joined the Law School Faculty in 1969, Professor James E. Jones Jr. (Class of '56) has carried a heavy load of civic and professional responsibilities. During recent months, his calendar included the following:

Participation in a conference jointly sponsored by the New York School of Industrial and Labor Relations (Cornell University) and the U.S. Department of Labor on the subject of Evaluating the Effects of the Federal Contract Compliance Program on May 8 and 9, 1975, where he served as a discussant for three papers on the Legal and Institutional Aspects of the Federal Contract Compliance.

Participation in the seventh annual conference of the Recruitment and Training Program, Inc., June 4-8 in Washington. His part of the program concerned Resolving Conflicts Between Affirmative Action and the Seniority System.

Lecturer on Insights into the Intent and Implementation of Judicial Mandates, as part of the Iowa Governor's Conference on Understanding Affirmative Action, February 27, 1975, at Drake University.

JAMES E. JONES JR. WEARS MANY HATS

James E. Jones, Jr.

Consultant to Washington, D.C., Board of Higher Education on development of a policy of labor-management relations. The Federal City College and the D.C. Teachers College are presently the institutions under control of the Board of Higher Education.

One of the speakers at a workshop, Affirmative Action for Jobs: The Battle Against Discrimination and Layoff and Dismissal which was part of the program at the NAACP national convention in Washington on July 1, 1975.

Member of the Committee on Standards and Goals of the Wisconsin Council on Criminal Justice which conducted a series of ten public hearings around Wisconsin to seek suggestions on What to Do About Youth in Trouble. He sits on a sub-committee on apprehension and detection. Professor Margo Melli serves on the sub-committee on Adjudication.

cont. on page 19