Dear Larry:

Do you remember me asking you for a sample of your handwriting at the Seminar about three weeks ago? Well, I have finally been able to come up with some sort of an analysis and I hope you will keep in mind that I am still an amateur at this.

To start with, you have complete balance between judgement and emotions. You can be moved to actions by appeals to either your judgement or your sympathies, but preferably with stress on emotional movers.

You have a tendency to become domineering on occasions.

You express your opinions bluntly.

You have an exploratory mind.

You have analytical ability, are a mental explorer, and are good for research and investigation.

You are an independent thinker, and, thinking independently, also act that way.

You possess decisiveness, have the ability to take a stand on a subject, to make a decision, to be positive.

You have a keen sense of sarcasm and are a person who puts an edge on what he says.

You do not pay too much attention - to details.

You have practicality, but show a lack of imagination.

You have determination - which increases in the face of difficulties, and, because of this, can drive yourself to complete a task.

That is all I can come up with from your handwriting, Larry. I hope it proves interesting to you as it has to me. It has also given me some valuable experiences. Let me know what you think about my analysis of you - and also about my other enclosed letter.

With best regards,
Silas E. Kubian
