About the Contributors

Adrienne C. Frie is a third year PhD student at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, focusing on the Dolenjska Hallstatt culture of Iron Age Slovenia. Her dissertation examines how conceptions of the natural world were culturally constructed in Iron Age Slovenia, specifically focusing on understanding the place of animals in the cultural world of the Dolenjska Hallstatt peoples.

Abby Forster is a PhD Candidate at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee. She draws from both medical and linguistic anthropology. Her dissertation research interest is in the politics of therapeutic discourse and mental health institutions. Abby approaches this topic through study of treatment practices for eating disorders in the United States.

Lindsey Jo Helms is a PhD student at the University of Wisconsin – Milwaukee. Under the direction of Dr. Patricia Richards, Lindsey is focusing her PhD studies on human variation and interaction from Medieval and Early Modern period cemetery sites in Croatia, using traditional skeletal morphological as well as isotopic and genetic analyses. She received her Masters of Science in Bioarchaeology from Illinois State University (Normal, IL), under the supervision of Dr. Maria O Smith, focusing on the examination of health and disease among Late Mississippian populations. Lindsey received her BA in Anthropology and Certificate of Forensic Sciences from Hamline University (St. Paul, MN), studying under Dr. Susan MT Myster in forensic anthropology and mortuary treatments among Great Lakes Woodland populations.

Susan Hill is a doctoral student in Cultural Anthropology at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee. She received her Master of Arts in Sociology and Social Anthropology from Central European University based on ethnographic research conducted among alternative tourism workers in Budapest, Hungary. She is currently studying underemployment among young adults in Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Margaret Kubek is a master's level anthropology student at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee. Her interests include food (in)security, urban and rural agriculture, and food studies and poverty. She has put her academic interests into practice through creation of the Seymour Park Community Garden and Wildcat Community Garden in Green Bay, WI.
